The first moment of critical self-consciousness occurs when, to escape his own prodigy, he puts him into the position of questioner. In addition to being badly treated, the unfortunate kid is humiliated in front of the whole class by the teacher. And such a young boy, who has just been included into the human race, is in fact good at being human, too, because it is a common object that he can. The second moment occurs when he is ordered by the teacher to perform a simple device function, such as seeing or counting. He knows that he is failing: his teacher is offering him a test rather than a mere lesson. When he fails in front of the entire class, he is confronted with the fundamental rule that nothing except you can teach you. Each student can be taught in this way
